When I run make test I get "make:  [test] Error 255" however it only does it when my make test isn't using the -d option. Any idea?

Your C programs should always return 0 if there are no errors. That means main should return 0 and any calls to exit should be exit(0) when no errors are detected. Make checks the return values of programs.

problem fixed. Thanks!