Can someone clarify what "x is more extreme than y" in terms of vertex values? If x's vertex = 2, and y's vertex = 1, then which is the more extreme?

The smaller value is more extreme in this project because the priority queue is being implemented with a min binomial heap. The definition of extreme would change if instead of using less than for the comparator you used greater than.