Can we all just take a moment to appreciate how much of a genius the person who developed the red-black tree algorithms was? Whenever I study the work of the great minds of the past I always feel so small and feeble minded.

This goes for most of the stuff we're doing in this class. Understanding it is one thing...inventing it? Producing it out of the endeavors of your own mind? This is why I love CS so much.

Back to work now.