Currently, my .h files have the optional "check" functions declared, but they are completely absent from my corresponding .c files. Do we need to at minimum write them in the .c's and return 1, or will they not be checked?

They won't be tested. They are there so you can do some consistency checking on your trees.